Ⅱ インターネットの普及によって生じた利便性の向上とその影に潜むリスク
について書かれた次の英文を読み、以下の問いに答えよ。

Since the 1990s, when people began using the internet, it has 8 very easy – in most countries – to get information about anything, in almost any place and at any time. The internet has also made it easier to learn, <sup>(a)</sup>through online lessons and using online study programs that are open to anyone.

But because we now use the internet for so many things, like shopping, talking to friends, studying, and listening to music, there is a lot of information online about the way we all live. Companies buy this information, and then use it to sell us things.

9, when a person in Tokyo buys train tickets online to get to Hiroshima in the west of Japan, she may get messages on her computer about restaurants and hotels in Hiroshima from companies that want her to eat or stay there.

Many people do not like it when companies buy and sell information about them in this way because they think that everyone should have the right to keep information about themselves secret.

Criminals get information about us from the internet, too. They can use the internet to steal money from people, or to take people's names and information about them and <sup>(b)</sup>pretend to be them. Many companies are now working to try and keep people safer online – and the police talk to schools and many different organizations about 10 to use the internet carefully.

Ⅳ 女性で初めて大西洋単独横断に成功したアメリア・イアハート (Amelia Earhart) の挑戦について書かれた次の文章を読み、各設問に答えよ。

[In] 1931, there were many changes in the world of flying. Slow, wood-framed airplanes had been replaced with faster all-metal models. The new planes had better instruments<sup>*1</sup>. Pilots could find their locations more easily and fly more safely. The newer planes were bigger and carried more passengers. Slowly, the public was won over to<sup>*2</sup> airplane travel. After all, it took four hours to go to Washington from New York by train. By plane the trip was only two and a half hours. In 1930, the first three flight attendants were hired by United Airlines. They were all nurses. They served meals and then took care of airsick passengers.

There were also more than 450 licensed female pilots in the United States. With more competition, it was getting harder to keep the public's interest. Amelia needed to do something different... One January morning in 1932, Amelia was having breakfast with her husband. She put down the paper she was reading and asked, "Would you mind if I flew the Atlantic"<sup>*3</sup> alone?" No! George didn't mind at all. 21 the first woman to fly solo across the Atlantic.

May 20, 1932, was the fifth anniversary of the Lindbergh<sup>*4</sup> flight. George Putnam<sup>*5</sup> thought that would be the perfect date for Amelia to take off. The press would love the connection.

Amelia had new instruments, including three compasses<sup>*6</sup>, put in her plane. The weather over the Atlantic could be bad. She would depend on the new technology to help her find her way. On the day of her flight, Amelia told reporters she was sure of her success. But before she climbed into her plane she quietly turned to a friend. "Do you think I can make it?" she asked. 22. Amelia took off from Harbour Grace airport in Newfoundland, Canada. Amelia didn't think the flight would be easy... and it wasn't. When she went too high, ice started to build on her wings. The ice made the plane heavy; it might crash. So she took the plane down low. But when she went too close to the water, her instruments didn't work. Without instruments,

Amelia could get completely lost. The hours went by slowly. Amelia struggled to find just the right altitude<sup>*7</sup>. She sipped<sup>*8</sup> chicken soup. Gasoline dripped down the back of her neck from the extra fuel tank. She struggled all night.

But when the sun came up, Amelia spotted land. She set her airplane down in a cow pasture<sup>*9</sup>, “frightening all the cows.” She was in Ireland. She had done it! Amelia was the first woman to fly solo across the Atlantic Ocean... Amelia was thirty-four years old. She was smart. She was brave and she was a great-looking woman. 23 When she returned to New York City, there was a parade down Broadway. Thousands of people lined the streets to cheer for Amelia. The next day, Amelia flew to Washington, D.C., where President Herbert Hoover presented her with a medal.

Amelia was as famous as movie stars of the day, but her fame did not change her. She was still charming and somewhat shy. Even so, she liked that her opinions were now heard and respected. Amelia became more active in politics<sup>*10</sup>. She joined the National Women’s Party<sup>*11</sup>. Amelia thought women should be able to do the same things men did.
